Brad Lindenberg of Lind Golf has been named a finalist in Anthill Magazine's inaugural '30under30' Awards.

Brad Lindenberg of Lind Golf has been named a finalist in Anthill Magazine's inaugural '30under30' Awards, a competition designed to discover Australia's leading entrepreneurial minds under the age of 30.

The winners and finalists were announced in the Jun/Jul edition of Anthill Magazine, after a three month application and judging process, designed to encourage and promote young entrepreneurship in Australia and create a national alumni of future leaders.

"The '30under30' Awards were developed to recognise a new breed of Australian business leader," said James Tuckerman, Editor-In-Chief, Anthill Magazine.

"We had an incredible turnout of applicants, both in numbers and talent, so it became an enormous challenge to pick just 30. This is why 30 finalists have been recognised as well. This crew grabbed our attention for their future potential, and we're excited to say that they are well worth keeping an eye on."

In true Anthill style, judging of the 2008 '30under30' Awards took into account far more than mere business variables, such as revenue and wealth. The judging process involved personality traits, the history of the applicant and his/her ability to overcome commercial and personal obstacles. Each applicant was judged against other applicants in his/her age field and his/her industry or field of expertise.

What are the '30under30' Awards?

30under30 is a new awards initiative developed by Anthill Magazine, in association with national partner Sensis, to encourage and promote entrepreneurship among young Australians. Thirty entrepreneurs under the age of 30 were selected and profiled in Anthill Magazine's Jun/Jul edition 2008, as the conclusion of the magazine's annual '30under30' Awards, in recognition of their outstanding entrepreneurial endeavours in Australia.

What is Anthill Magazine?

Anthill is a national business magazine that celebrates creativity, inspiration and commercial ingenuity. It is the business magazine for entrepreneurs by entrepreneurs, providing a fresh, exciting and, importantly, practical perspective on Australian business in a global world.
